

Would You Like to Be Profiled for Tryengineering.org?

Tryengineering.org is a portal about engineering and engineering careers. It is designed to encourage young people to explore what it means to be an engineer, to learn about the many types of careers in engineering, and to provide young people with resources for learning more about engineering and the pathways they can take to an engineering career. This website is a joint effort between IEEE and IBM.

I am working with Educational Activities to get more visibility for the power industry on Tryengineering.org. We are looking for engineers working in the power industry to profile on the website. You'll be asked to complete a questionnaire about 20 questions in length, and provide a headshot. The overall message should be positive, realistic but encouraging. Tryengineering.org also partners with Sloan so the profile may go onto their website as well.

Would you be interested in being profiled as a power industry engineer on Tryengineering.org? If so, please contact me at s.koval@ieee.org, or call me at 732-562-6897, and I will get the process started.

Thanks!
